“Nothing can dim the light that shines from within.” — Maya Angelou

“Share your bread with the hungry, shelter the oppressed and the homeless. clothe the naked when you see them, and do not turn your back on your own”. These ancient words from the prophet Isaiah seem very clear. They speak to our times today. Our world is filled with immense suffering - hunger, poverty, homelessness, oppression, violence etc.

Growing up in the Catholic community, I was raised to develop a sense of duty to care for the homeless, helpless, hungry, and forsaken. The practice of “service” and “volunteerism” were baked into the culture of going to church. Collections were taken at Mass; service trips and community projects were organized by the members of our parish.

These tenets became embedded into my ethical understanding of how I am responsible for my neighbour, community, and world. However, oftentimes, it seemed like we were merely putting a Band-Aid on a much larger wound. This was a struggle in my formative years as a young adult Catholic and something that still challenges my understanding of the mission of our faith community. I saw much of this work as falling short of how I imagined our world could and should be.

My exposure to and participation in Catholic good works made me impatient for solutions to complex social issues. I studied psychology, sociology, and public policy - seeking a deeper and tactical understanding of how to move our society out of the darkness and into the light. I didn't find the answers I was looking for in either the church, academia, or even working with local government and nonprofits.

In our second reading, Paul says we can't rely on human wisdom alone. And that resonates with me. I've studied our history. I've learned about all the ways we've tried to heal our wounded world. We've tried. We even conducted a “War” on poverty. And yes, we've made some progress. But at this point in our history, with the wealth and abundance surrounding all of us... no one should be patting themselves on the back. Our “human wisdom” has fallen short. Something in our minds and hearts is preventing us from really committing to building the Kingdom of God here on earth.

For me, Isaiah's message is a challenge to do more than “Band-Aid work.”

For us to step into the light and, like Jesus said, really “let our light shine before others,” we must transform our thoughts and daily behaviours. Caring effectively for the oppressed in our world requires radical transformation. It will take more than seasonal or one-time efforts - like food drives and service trips. It will take nothing less than the Gospel call to conversion – to go beyond our small self to a higher mind and consciousness.

When we engage in this process of transformation, we become moved to change the system that creates human suffering. When we step into this Light, we reckon with how our inaction and silence has maintained the status quo and prevented the emergence of God's kingdom.

When we draw close to God, we're led to reject our tendencies to engage in, as Isaiah says, “false accusations and malicious speech.” We're challenged to look at our own unloving attitudes that can sometimes be pervasive, even though often unconscious. If we cannot rely on human wisdom alone, as Paul says, then where does that leave us?

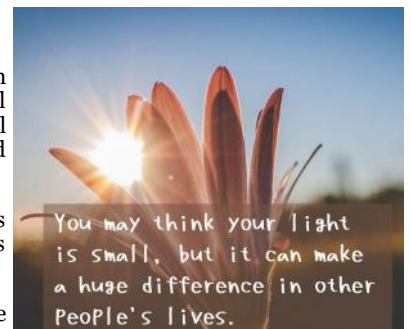

We live in an information overload. Just turn on the news for 10 minutes, and you know exactly what I mean. The need is so great; the stakes are so high, that it's easy to succumb to apathy and even a self-preservationist line of thinking. Sometimes the pain and suffering of the world are so great that we silence it.

But if we tune it all out, avoid the pain and suffering, give up hope, point only to the failure of institutions, and accept the issues plaguing our society as inevitable – and permanent – can we really help to create the Kingdom of God? Visualize God's Kingdom here on earth - a world where the psychosocial disease of racism is eliminated, where equity is embedded in our worldview and systems; the natural world is protected from environmental harm, the tribalism among our religious sects and political camps is behind us. Visualize a world where no one hungers, the afflicted are comforted, and people are treated equally regardless of their race, sex, gender, income, education, and sexual orientation.

It's in our nature to love and serve because of the divine presence within. Look to the scientific findings of contemporary biology. So fundamental is charitable behaviour to our nature as humans, we observe a phenomenon that occurs when we help others. Our brains release hormones - boosting our mood and counteracting the effect of stress. When we, as Isaiah proclaims, “share our bread with the hungry and clothe the naked”- our bodies thank us – we are healed, we defy the gloom of our world. Our psyches and spirits are illuminated! I'm still seeking a path that leads to the transformation of society on a deeper level. As I open my heart to the divine presence, I'm listening more, and trying to discern what God is calling me to do. And while I recognize that public reform and charity are crucial, I also know this work is about more than handing out bread to the poor. This is more than a one-time public policy measure, philanthropic event, or election; this is a life's work.

Let us bravely step into the light and, together, be about liberating others and ourselves from oppressive thinking. As we draw closer to the light, perhaps the prophetic words of Isaiah, Paul, and Jesus may embolden us to work toward bringing healing, justice, and peace to our world. Is this not what the Kingdom of God is all about? - Reflections of MARY C. MIRO (Source duly acknowledged)

St Josephine

Bakhita

Feast Day:

8 February 2023

For many years, Josephine Bakhita was a slave but her spirit was always free and eventually that spirit prevailed. Born in Olgossa in the Darfur region of southern Sudan, Josephine was kidnapped at the age of 7, sold into slavery and given the name Bakhita, which means fortunate. She was resold several times, finally in 1883 to Callisto Legnani, Italian consul in Khartoum, Sudan. Two years later, he took Josephine to Italy and gave her to his friend Augusto Michieli. Bakhita became babysitter to Mimmina Michieli, whom she accompanied to Venice's Institute of the Catechumens, run by the Canossian Sisters. While Mimmina was being instructed, Josephine felt drawn to the Catholic Church. She was baptized and confirmed in 1890, taking the name Josephine. When the Michielis returned from Africa and wanted to take Mimmina and Josephine back with them, the future saint refused to go. During the ensuing court case, the Canossian Sisters and the patriarch of Venice intervened on Josephine's behalf. The judge concluded that since slavery was illegal in Italy, she had actually been free since 1885. Josephine entered the Institute of St. Magdalene of Canossa in 1893 and made her profession three years later. In 1902, she was transferred to the city of Schio (northeast of Verona), where she assisted her religious community through cooking, sewing, embroidery, and welcoming visitors at the door. She soon became well loved by the children attending the sisters' school and the local citizens. She once said, "Be good, love the Lord, pray for those who do not know Him. What a great grace it is to know God!" The first steps toward her beatification began in 1959. She was beatified in 1992 and canonized eight years later. <https://www.franciscanmedia.org/saint-of-the-day/calendar/>
